HOW EARTHQUAKES

TAKE PLACE Geologists have been able to show us just what happens when the earth's crust is disturbed. Mt. Marcy, in the Adirondacks, was created by internal pressure of moiten rock which burst a hole several miles in diamater in the outer crust, and through this a plug of fused granite was pushed up to a height of nearly 5.000 feet. Modern disturbances are less imposing.

Figure 1 shows a crack in the stratifiinto which igneous rock has flowed great pressure below, to harden edome a part of the solid mass.

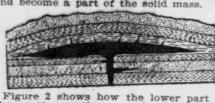

Figure 3 shows how the stratification sometimes split apart and afterward driver sometimes split apart and afterward driven together with such force as to leave them partially overlapping and forming what is termed in geology a fault. Such changes, taking place in masses weighing millions of tons and perhaps miles in thickness cause the earthquakes.—Detroit Tribune.

The sunlight and the mist-winds Fell on your merry clime— But the sneering God of Destiny Lay deep, and bode His time.

The bay where Drake made merry Upon the Golden Hind,
The bay that brought the Argonaut A modern Fleece to find;

The hope of Western Empire
That faced the Orient sea;
Low in the dust of the frail Earth's And the Earth was false to thee. The wind sweeps up the fog bank,
The clouds blot out the sun;
And the towers ye made, like the mists,
shall fade—
So the Reaper's will be done.
